

Research and Translation Capabilities

Riverside Research's team of foreign language-enabled research analysts and linguists with Mandarin Chinese, Russian, and additional language skills provide language-enabled research capabilities and technical translation support for our mission partners. Our work consists of foreign language-enabled research of adversary advances in technology and tactics, techniques, and procedures through analysis and translation of research publications and other materials. Through our projects, we provide subject matter expertise to meet the needs of our nation.

This Riverside Research team of professionals come from diverse language backgrounds, each individually strong, collectively providing comprehensive understanding of technical language usage and contextual nuance. Our foreign language experts have acquired their language skills through a variety of channels, including military education, academic training, in-country immersion, and native acquisition.

The diversity in language development avenues, coupled with academic research skills, advanced technical degrees, and experience enables our team to effectively apply their research and linguistic skills to provide open-source research and translation in various technical areas of interest to our government customers.

Our team fosters academic and industry partnerships to hone and interpret open-source technical research and findings, allowing for robust examination of international technology development trends of concern to our government customers.

Riverside Research is an independent nonprofit focused on our nation's security. Our stakeholders are the American people. Our primary purpose is to serve the research, development, and operational needs of the U.S. Government and to keep America safe. Our nonprofit structure gives us the freedom to do what's right. We measure our success by the positive impact we make in the world.

Riverside Research offers a unique blend of nonprofit status, R&D culture, and depth of mission understanding. If you're looking for an environment that values investment in research, devotion to personal and team growth, and the agility to meet mission critical demands, consider joining Riverside Research.
